

Better Construction at Lower Cost

STUDY THESE CUTS

What Interlocking Tile Is

It is a general wall-building material, suitable for use in every character of structure, from the cottage and small store to the mansion and skyscraper.

In it are combined the "cooler in summer, warmer in winter," and lightness of weight features of the hollow wall, with the strength of brick and concrete; in addition, it interlocks in the wall, making the strongest and most rigid wall that can be built. Every unit is a leader.

Interlocking Tile is not to be confused with ordinary square tile, which is only designed and intended for partition, and other interior non-load-bearing walls.

WHAT INTERLOCKING TILE DOES FOR ITS USERS

It builds an amazingly low cost (little more than that of good frame) walls that are non-conductive, light in weight, damp proof, comfortable the year around, and more efficient in every way. It increases the buying value of the building dollar.

SNYDER MAN WRITES OF THIS SECTION

Following item is clipped from the Cyclone, Which was Written By a Snyder Man.

From the Lower Plains County,

Of all the winds that blow,
I dearly love the west.—Burke.

I have been thinking for some time that I could regale the columnists of the Cyclone with a few thoughts from the west.

The hand of winter is now laid upon the peaks at the foot of the plains, and the grass is brown and bare.

The winter of 1915 comes upon a more prosperous people out in the plains country than has been their fortune for several winters past.

The rains have visited us regularly and at short intervals for the past two years, and this prolific country has responded with the characteristic gush and vigor of a new soil.

Rain, sun, cotton and early will—cotton has done well, and the farmer who has been here sufficiently long to witness growth with the experts of the climate and the local conditions of the country, has every reason to be sanguine of the future with a comfortable look because a few exceptionally profitable seasons at any time, and one especially favorable at the present time of world commerce.

The hardships of pioneer life were appreciated here during a few rare dry weather that was almost without parallel. But the people kept on staying, with that characteristic American spirit that knows no defeat.

They had for inspiration the history of other sections of the state that had at first been unreasonable, but with increasing population the kindly and benevolent hand of Providence had made more reasonable. "The Lord helps those who help themselves."

And when people occupy a land, found homes, built towns, schools and churches, it becomes an inherent belief upon their part that a corresponding compensation shall come in the natural order to assist their needs.

This belief has been justified here within the past few years. Desire to tenure falls—and the harvest man has been equal with the things necessary for the happiness, prosperity and contentment of a people.

And it is a blessed and recent people who gather about their marsh stones, out in this country, during the closing days of the year, ready for the round of their efforts from the Give nuff and, with a feeling of confidence and trust for the future.

CYCLOONE DAVID IN CONGRESS

States. Characteristic Dishes in Speech and Personal Appearance.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—Cyclone David, champion political writer of Texas, went three fast rounds in the House today with the Republicans, and various National issues. The "Cyclone" was in the pink of condition except for his voice, which had developed a pronounced tremble. He had no difficulty in controlling his wobbly swing and his layman's punch which he used continuously. A large audience gave a unanimous ovation and the bout was a draw.

One of the accustomed unison, including the gray spade widower, his patriotic shirt and his white sailor, the "Cyclone" entered the arena belligerent and confident in his maiden effort.

The "Cyclone" first tackled the Republicans and with a shower of caustic invective, some rude poetry, little smoky epithets and scurrilous invectives assailed that in "applying a blister plaster" to the Republicans he was not acting in hate but following Divine example in "chastening those he loved." Whenever a verbal blow went home the Texas champion swung his arms and emitted a sound that was a cross between a laugh, a chuckle, a cackle and a snarl. It sounded sarcastic and it brought a laugh from the spectators every time. Occasionally it was varied by a long drawn out whistle.

After slaying the Republicans the "Cyclone" spent a few quiet moments with the facts credit proposals of the administration, bidding several body blows. Then the real bout began as we went after preparedness. The contest was bitter and bloody and ended in a shower of poetry that put the National defense to rout. This deciding blow was a stanza of amateur poetry which sounded like this:

ghost gun chambers never cease.
And dying millions more.
While we bid the dogs of war
On human flesh call home?"
